Woman's Lot In Bavaria If there is any one country of civiized Europe that is away behind her sisters in her treatment of the fair sex t is Bayaria most assuredly. There all the hard work falls to the women, while men, it seems, are at best super-intendents of their labor. The femiaine portion of the population of this strangely unprogressive country makes its living by sawing wood, carrying mortar and bricks and even doing all the manual labor of building houses. Even the municipality itself encour-ages the employment of women along these lines by allowing the trainway company to hire women for cleaning out the train rails. Indeed, in Munich

CATCHING THE TARPON.

Battle Royal Between the Angles and the Monster Fish.

The tarpon is a "top feeder"-that is, he seeks his food near the surface. Those who know him best fish for him with a live mullet, which is not allowed to sink more than two feet below the wayes, being sustained by a large "float" or cork. The inner portion of take secure hold upon it. This being so, it is necessary to allow him partially to swallow the bait, which he will do by the time that he has carried the float whirling along the water. the float whirling along the water for a space of thirty feet. Afterward is the time to swear and pray. The tar-pon reel holds 600 feet of line. Not infrequently when he feels the hook the fish will strike the trail for blue water with a seemingly irresistible rush and keep going. What happens when his 150 pounds of express speed are pitted against the strength of a line that is run out needs not to be told. He simply sails on out to sea, whipping behind him 200 yards of silk, and whether he lives or whether he dies its former owner knows not, He can

He looks at the sun, which seems surprisingly low in the heavens. He looks at his watch and refuses to believe that two hours have that two hours have passed in that desperate wrestle. But unless he be in thorough training and past master of his art a swollen, aching wrist will tell him for days afterward that in the silver king of the southern seas he was near to meeting his match.

GOOD CRY

By DONALD ALLEN Copyright, 1904, by Ruby Dougli

Pretty Viola Craydon had come down to visit her aunt in her country home. and for a week she had been supremely happy. There were chickens and ducks and geese, there were guinea hens and doves and rabbits, there were innocent inmbkins and frolicking calves, and she bad tried to milk a cow, fallen off a fence and churned two pounds of butter. But for Arthur Tyson this dream of bliss might have continued another week, and pretty Viola might have climbed to the roof of the wagon shed, sold paper rags to a fin peddler and gone blackberrying down in the mead-ow as a continuance of her romantic

Arthur Tyson had not only fallen in love with her, but he was intending to ask for her hand. He hadn't published his intentions in any of the journals or told the country postmistress what was in his mind, but Miss Viola had a was in his mind, but Miss Viola had a line on him. You can't fool a girl about such things. The man who is courting her may talk about the joys of backelor life and pretend to be a cynic on affairs of sentiment, but she can read him like a book. When Arthur had said that he would arrive at Viola's aunt's on the 14th—running down in his auto in the forenoon and running book to the city again in the evening. back to the city again in the eveningthere was a look in his eyes that said there would be something doing.

The 14th came, and then things be gan to happen. A letter arrived from Arthur to say that his grandmother wanted him to hurry to her dying bedside; a big bumblebee came droning along, even as Viola was reading the letter while sented on the veranda, and stung her on the bare arm; a windmill man called on business and tried to firt with her; she was chased out of the barnyard by a calf and chased back again by a turkey gobbler; the dog got hold of her cute summer hat and chewed it up, and she fell down cellar while going after preserves and landed on top of the family cat.

Several other vexations things oc curred between the morning of the 14th and noon of the next day, and an hour after dinner Miss Viola made up delighteen to twenty miles wide and about forty five miles long, is at times literally covered with them as far as the eye can reach. Covering the entire the eye can reach. Covering the entire that to have a good cry. If she can be a covered in the base her aunt, who was a sunlight, they present a beautiful pieture. Down across the meadow and half a Down across the meadow and half a mile from the house there was a small grove, and the disconsolate girl finally made up her mind that her tears of sorrow should be shed around the roots of those trees. Her manner of dodging her aunt and getting out of the house and down to the grove would have been called "making a sueak" by some, but a restrict who is looking for a but a pretty girl who is looking for a crying place should not be judged too harshly

She found the grove a capital place for her business. There were shade and quietness and the whispering of the summer breeze through the leaves, and Misa Viola went at it and let the tears fall, her chin quiver and her sobs frighten away the lone chickadee that was taking a daytime nan on a branch

Mr. Tyson hastened to the bedside of his dying grandmother, thinking that it would be a whole week before she would die and be buried and the will mentioning him as sole heir read. mentioning him as sole heir read.
Upon his arrival a glad surprise awaited him. It was a case of billous colle only, caused by eating too heartly of corned beef and cabbage at the advanced age of eighty-three.

He would have hastened away at once, but the grandmother objected. She had a story to tell-a story of how She had a story to tell—a story of how that colic grasped and gripped her and insted her ten hours before the doctor could bring relief. It took her all day to finish the story, and then it took her nephew several hours in addition to convince her that if he did not hasten back to town the whole United States would turn turtle.

He made things hum when he got started, but it was midafternoon of the 15th when his auto arrived within she wasn't sitting there just then. She Weekly.

Miss Viola was in a distressful con-

Arthur stood up to look over the crowd. A woman had apparently fainted away, and two or three men were about to pick her up and carry her across to the train. As her shoulders were lifted up he caught sight of her face, and next instant things were happening again.

He sprang down into the crowd, elbowed men and kicked dogs right and left, and in a moment was beside the woman. The woman's hair was down and her face covered with dust and grime and her dress tora from neck to shoulder, but love makes no mistake

The proposal hadn't come in just the romantic form expected, but Miss Viola was a girl of sense and realized that when exigencles arise the machinery of romance may be thrown out of gear.
